The Southeastern Poll: The 2008 Olde Towne Slidell Revitalization Survey

Less than three years after Hurricane Katrina ripped through their area, constituents of the Olde Towne Slidell Preservation District in Slidell, Louisiana feel well-informed and concerned about problems facing people with interests in the area. While high levels of concern exist regardless of an individual's subjective level of information, those who report the highest level of information are the most concerned. Types of concerns and possible solutions are reflected, to some degree, in perceptions regarding the level of existence for, and the importance of, 21 characteristics or amenities. But concerns are also evident in what people consider the most important problems facing Olde Towne Slidell.

These are the results of a mail survey of constituents at physical addresses located inside the Olde Towne Slidell Preservation District. The survey was conducted in June and July 2008 by the Southeastern Social Science Research Center, at the request of the Olde Towne Slidell Preservation Task Force, in partnership with the City of Slidell and the Southeastern Small Business Development Office. The total sample size is 166. While the sample is not a purely random or scientific sample, for the purpose of exploring the importance of these results, we report a sampling error of  $\pm 7.76\%$ . Subsamples of smaller size will have larger sampling errors.

I. Individual Perceived Levels of Information and Concern

Any movement to revitalize Olde Towne Slidell will depend on individuals who feel informed about the problems facing constituents of the area, as well as the level of concern that these problems generate. Establishing a baseline understanding of these things can tell us whether there is a ready pool of informed and concerned constituents from which to draw support and how much more needs to be done to raise awareness of any needs or problems. With this in mind, we asked constituents to rate their own level of information regarding problems in Olde Towne Slidell by placing themselves on a five-point scale where 1 = "completely uninformed" and 5 = "extremely well informed. Almost 29% feel uninformed (combining the lowest two categories), 30.1% well informed (combining the highest two categories), and 41.1% in the middle or somewhat informed (Table 1).

Similarly, we asked constituents to rate their own level of concern regarding problems in Olde Towne Slidell by placing themselves on a five-point scale where 1 = "completely unconcerned" and 5 = "extremely concerned. About 5.6% feel unconcerned (combining the lowest two categories), 74.8% concerned (combining the highest two categories), and 19.6% in the middle or somewhat concerned (Table 2). In fact, levels of concern are high regardless of the individual perception of their level of information, telling us that, although many constituents may not feel well informed about problems facing Olde Towne Slidell, there is a very strong current of concern that something just isn't quite right (Table 3).

II. The Most Important Problem

We asked respondents “As far as you are concerned, what is the single most important problem facing Olde Towne Slidell?” Then we asked for the “second most important problem.” The raw data on these questions is relatively extensive, more so than in most surveys, as it includes multiple responses to each question. For this reason, Tables 4 and 5 list only groupings of the first problems mentioned as people responded to each of these two questions. In an indication as to how seriously respondents in this community think about problems facing Olde Towne Slidell, 92% of these respondents actually had something to say about the “most important problem.” Only about 8% didn’t list anything as. The leading six concerns for the “most important problem” question are economic development aid/lack of business (13.3%), abandoned/blight/unrestored/vacant property (12%), bars (7.8%), getting people to shop here/more PR (7.2%), drainage/flooding and traffic/speeding (tied at 5.4% each) (Table 4). Answers to the “second most important problem” question show a similar pattern (Table 5)

III. Twenty-One Characteristics or Amenities: Needs and Evaluations

We compiled a list of 21 characteristics or amenities that are often seen as vital to urban development. Then we asked respondents to rate whether they thought Olde Towne Slidell had enough of these items by placing their perceptions on a five-point scale where 1 = none and 5 = plenty. However, we allowed each respondent to say that there was “too much” of something. In the end, we developed a six-point scale from “none” to “too much” (Table 6).

Large percentages of respondents feel that there (is) are none (the lowest category) or not enough (combining the second two lowest categories) of the following in Olde Towne Slidell: public transportation (75% none, 21% not enough), tree-lined streets (3% none, 60% not enough), green space (5% none, 67% not enough), museums and galleries (8% none, 71% not enough), restaurants (6% none, 78% not enough), good streets (9% none, 61% not enough), performing arts venues (9% none, 70% not enough), education and training venues (25% none, 67% not enough), proper mix of businesses (8% none, 77% not enough), architectural focus (17% none, 69% not enough), safety from crime (5% none, 62% not enough), cleanliness (6% none, 61% not enough), safe street crossings (8% none, 65% not enough), sidewalks (10% none, 51% not enough), benches (17% none, 66% not enough), lighting (2% none, 61% not enough), outdoors farmer’s market (40% none, 38% not enough), safety for pedestrians (9% none, 51% not enough), safety for bikes (18% none, 61% not enough) and convenient banking (10% none, 56% not enough). The lone exception is bars (0% none, 20% not enough), most feeling that there are either plenty or too many (“too much”) (Table 6).

* “Too Much” was included visually in the actual list of acceptable possible responses.
 ** Combines categories 3 and 4.

At the same time, we asked respondents to tell us how important was each of these characteristics or amenities to the development of Olde Towne Slidell (Table 7). This question involved a five-point scale (where 1 = not important and 5 = extremely important). Collapsing the top two categories (4 and 5 = important) we find that large percentages of respondents rate the importance of each item in the following ways: public transportation (33%), tree-lined streets (66%), green space (67%), museums and galleries (65%), restaurants (82%), good streets (89%), performing arts venues (71%), education and training venues (58%), proper mix of businesses (87%), architectural focus (78%), safety from crime (97%), cleanliness (97%), safe street crossings (93%), sidewalks (83%), benches (65%), lighting (86%), outdoors farmer’s market (73%), safety for pedestrians (92%), safety for bikes (81%) and convenient banking (53%). As before, the lone exception is bars (12%) (Table 7).

An important question has to do with how important are those characteristics for which high percentages of respondents believe that there are none or not enough. One could assume that if people believe that there is not enough of something, and they think that it is important, they might be more likely to support the development or acquisition of whatever characteristic or amenity it might be. For example, while it appears that 96% believe that there is no public transportation, or not enough of it, only 33% believe that this is important. Only 20% say that there are either no bars or not enough of them. But only 12% think that bars are important or extremely important to the development of Olde Towne Slidell. In all other instances, large majorities of respondents think that there are none or not enough of these characteristics or amenities and that they are important or extremely important to Olde Towne Slidell (Table 8).

About the Southeastern Poll

This particular Southeastern Poll was co-directed by Drs. Kurt Corbello (Political Science) and Bonnie Lewis, Director of the Southeastern Social Science Research Center. Through the Southeastern Poll, Southeastern Louisiana University provides objective and independent analyses of public opinion on important issues and elections. Each poll is conducted by students who are trained for the purpose and who are under professional supervision. While Dr. Corbello is the author of this report, the hardest work was done by Dr. Lewis and the student staff members of the SSRC, who prepared all aspects of this project, from production to sampling preparation, through data collection and management. We also thank our friends on the Olde Towne Slidell Preservation Task Force, the Olde Towne Slidell Association and officials with the City of Slidell for trusting us to do this research on their behalf.

Facilities for the Southeastern Poll are provided by the Southeastern Social Science Research Center (SSRC).
